Stalker had a knife and rope, court told

A MAN has been convicted of stalking a pharmacy worker while carrying masking tape, a rope and an 8in kitchen knife in the boot of his car.

Nigel Proctor, 44, turned up at David Holland pharmacy between 10 and 15 times in four months to watch Kelly Shurety at work either from his car or looking in through the door.

She confronted him when she and other members of staff at the pharmacy in Greenfields Way, Haverhill, saw him spying on her through binoculars.

Bury St Edmunds Magistrates' Court heard on one occasion she also spotted him sitting in his car close to her home.

When police searched Proctor's car they found equipment in his boot including a knife, a hammer, masking tape, bin bags, rope, dumb bells and one half of a pair of binoculars.

Another pair of binoculars was also found in the glove compartment of the vehicle.

Pc Matthew Dale said he was "very concerned" by the items found in Proctor's car.

Mrs Shurety said the police's discovery had "terrified" her and left her frightened to walk home or be in the house alone.

She told the court: "At first I did not think that much about it, but after the binoculars I became fearful.

"You do not watch someone through binoculars, it was an invasion of my privacy and not normal.

"After he was arrested I was terrified by the things that were found in his car. I did not know how far it would go, whether it was just watching or something more concerning.

"I felt vulnerable and stopped taking my daughter to school. I consider myself to be quite a strong person, but I do not feel safe to walk home in the dark or in the house alone any more."

Proctor, of Girton Road, Haverhill, denied pursuing a course of conduct which amounted to harassment between September and December last year.

He said he was a regular user of the pharmacy and had been waiting outside to pick up his mother. He said he had forgotten that the borrowed knife was in the boot of his car and kept the binoculars for watching sporting events.

The court heard Proctor had a previous conviction for stalking a 13-year-old schoolgirl in Haverhill between March and September 2011.

Magistrates found him guilty, but put off sentencing him until March 19 so a pre-sentence report could be prepared.

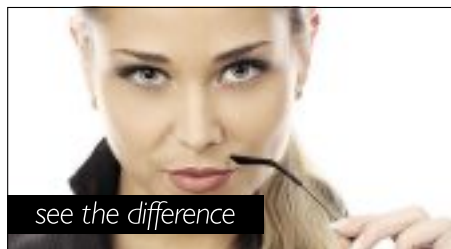

Fiona Crabtree, chairman of the bench, said: "We do not find you a credible witness; we find the evidence of the witnesses very compelling."

I HOPE you are all settled into 2013, have hit it running, and your businesses are doing well.

I was reminded recently how important passion and perseverance is in both life and business – if you really want something then no matter how humble your beginnings are your dreams really can come true, they do not always have to fade and die.

So it is quite appropriate in this month's column I had the opportunity to interview Malcolm Hill, who, despite being the grand old age of 83, has had a lifelong passion for Britain's railways and is the driving force behind trying to resurrect the Haverhill Rail project.

If he is successful then for generations to come the residents of Haverhill and the wider business community should forever be in his debt. I hope you find the interview as interesting and informative as I did, he was a pleasure to talk to. If you think you can give Malcolm any assistance then please feel free to email him on Malcolm.hill12@btinternet.com

I would like to thank the Weekly News for giving me the opportunity to write this column, which enabled me to interview the West Ham United co-chairman David Gold who then commissioned me to write his story in booklet form David Gold Triumph over Diversity, which I am delighted to say has resulted in an order of 1,500 copies which are currently being printed ready to be sold in the West Ham shop.

His story is very inspirational and is the quintessence of starting from humble beginnings.

I am also extremely grateful for the hospitality he afforded me when I visited his home for a supposed one-hour appointment which stretched to nearly six.

Should you wish to purchase the booklet resulting from my time with David Gold, it is available on the CXG Website: www.cxggroup.co.uk and the cost is just £2.99.

Mr Gold was delighted with the end result and has personally ordered many copies himself to give to his family and close friends.

I will be making a donation to charity for every copy sold through the website.

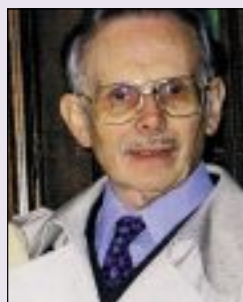

Q&A: Malcolm Hill

Tell us about your background and how you became a major voice in re-instating the railway network to Haverhill?

It goes back a long way! I am now 83 and my interest started when I lived in South Wales in 1980. It was a time of massive unemployment because the mines were closing down and I felt there should be something to substitute for this. South Wales was neglected as far as tourism was concerned and I suggested a rather revolutionary idea of a Valley and Mountain railway to link the valleys from Swansea in the west through to the English border. I then came to Sudbury in 1988 and met with a similar situation unemployment wise. I again felt a railway would give people more opportunity to find work. In 1994 I placed an article about it in the local paper and a Haverhill schoolboy responded suggesting I get people together who were like-minded. I put a second article in the paper advertising an initial meeting to discuss and that's how the Sudbury to Haverhill Railway Renewal Association began. From the initial meeting where six people turned up it has now grown to 150 members.

Why the rail link here closed?

It wasn't profitable – it was losing approximately £20,000 per year, which, at the time, was a lot of money. The service wasn't very good, maybe four trains hourly, so if you missed one you had to wait half a day for the next. A good service would be at least hourly between Cambridge and Sudbury to make it worthwhile. Since then, of course, the use of the rail system has increased a great deal. As far as the Government and Lord Beeching's plans at the time, the railways were categorised under three headings: 'definitely stay open', 'definitely close' and the 'doubtful' ones. Haverhill was on the 'doubtful' list and became one of the closure casualties.

Thousands of people have come to Haverhill subsequently. What was the route at the time? I believe you could travel to Cambridge and directly connect to all main routes?

That's right, and the other way to Sudbury. Fortunately, Sudbury still has a rail line which takes you to Marks Tey where you can pick up the main line to either London or Norwich. For example, when my wife visits our grandson in London, she gets the 09.26 train from Sudbury and with the connection in Marks Tey will be in Stratford by 10.36am, just over an hour for the journey.

And once in Stratford, of course, there is the Central Line connection to the whole of London?

Yes, it is certainly an advantage to have the rail link in Sudbury. The line also went through the outlying villages; to the west of Haverhill, through Linton (population 4,000) and Sawston (pop. 7,000) and on the east towards Sudbury, through Clare (pop. 3,000) and Long Melford (pop. 4,000).

And, as we know, these populations have expanded quite dramatically since the line was closed. How would line re-instatement benefit both the business and the general public community?

Yes, you are quite right, especially Haverhill, with the investment in the town, the bypass and all the new housing. And, I believe, with the new research park the regeneration is on-going. A re-instated railway as far as Haverhill is concerned would have to run parallel to the bypass, which passes to the south and a station would have to be somewhere around Hazel Stub (close to the roundabout at the top of Camps Road/Burton End). Of course, it would be close to all the industrial businesses all along the bypass and it would therefore be advantageous to make the line 'freight usable' enabling the companies to send goods via train to wherever they wished. This would enable more employment and this was our main concern. We are not just looking at this from a sentimental view point.

The Coalition Government are telling us they need to put more money into not only public transport but the construction industry etc. and, of course, that would be building the line. So bearing in mind the current economic climate have you had much support from local MPs or the leaders of the councils for your campaign?

It has been patchy. Tim Ewell, the MP for South Suffolk, which includes Sudbury, and Bob Russell, the MP for Colchester are both in favour. Matthew Hancock's preference seems to be for the guided busway, like the one that is now running from Cambridge to St Ives. This is also the opinion of Suffolk County Council. Cllr Guy McGregor (Suffolk County Council transport portfolio holder) is very much in favour of the guided busway rather than a railway. Our group have travelled on the Cambridge to St Ives route, and indeed, it is quite a good concern but it doesn't link into the rail network and the link at Cambridge station isn't too good. However, that may well be improved. I should mention the guided busway is on our scope for the engineering study – if the railway isn't possible the guided busway could be another way.

Josh is off to a flying start

TEENAGER Josh Wilson has started his own market stall after establishing a thriving online business in his bedroom.

On Saturday, Josh, who has only just turned 18, had a visit from a 5ft tall 'Mr Potato Head' to advertise his new venture, stocking novelty iPod and phone cases, sunglasses and American candy.

The market's youngest trader got off to a flying start and now plans to have a stall on the Friday market as well. He also has a full-time job running the eBay side of the STP business in Camps Road, Haverhill.

Josh, of Tern Close, Haverhill, said: "I have been selling iPod cases at school since I was 14 and it was going so well I set up on line to sell them on eBay, and then expanded to the market stall.

"I have got around 15,000 in stock at the moment and I have probably sold more than 20,000. I just spotted a gap in the market and went for it. I import the majority of them from China, they are novelty ones and you can have funny slogans or pictures of yourself on them.

"They sell really well. I don't know how much it makes, but I know I have made a profit every single week and it has run into thousands. I was very busy on Saturday – Mr Potato Head brought in a lot of new customers.

"I would like to open a shop one day, but eBay lets you have a market worldwide."

Josh's online site is www.stuckforagift.com.

Keeping busy: Josh Wilson has opened his own market stall.

Great response to appeal for phones

A SINGLE mum has been overwhelmed by the generous response to her appeal for old mobile phones, with more than 60 donated in less than a week.

Samantha Last had managed to collect 40 phones herself, but needs 185 to exchange for an iPad with a special app for her autistic son Oliver, 4.

Oliver is due to start school in September, and mum Samantha believes the app would help him to improve his learning skills before then.

The charity Hearts and Minds will provide the iPad – which would cost around £400 to buy – and an app designed for people with autism in exchange for 185 phones.

Samantha, of Pipers Close, Haverhill, had managed to collect 40, but was struggling to find more.

She came to the Weekly News for help and more than 50 phones have been brought into our office in Queen Street, Haverhill, since her story was featured.

Samantha said: "I did not expect a response as good as it has been.

"I am really pleased and hopefully we will get enough for the iPad soon."

The phones can be up to 10 years old, do not need to be working and can be damaged, as long as they have a battery.

Oliver was diagnosed with autism just before his third birthday, and Samantha said it was a relief to find out what was causing his delayed development.

Samantha added: "Since he has been diagnosed he has made huge progress but he has poor concentration and gets very frustrated.

"He is going to mainstream school and I don't know how he is going to get on, but as a mother you do anything that you can to try to help your child get along."

Urgent calls to address child poverty in the town

LABOUR councillors have expressed deep concern at high levels of child poverty in their town.

A report published by the Campaign to End Child Poverty reveals that 17 per cent of children are living in poverty in Haverhill. It reveals that child poverty affects 1,068 of the 6,376 children in the four wards of Haverhill.

Labour group members on Haverhill Town Council are calling upon Suffolk County Council and St Edmundsbury Borough Council to urgently consider the disturbing levels of child poverty, in Haverhill and throughout the area, and to focus on the wards most affected.

They accuse the county council of complacency by the lack of any co-ordinated strategy to address the issue.

Children are deemed to be living in poverty if the household income is less than 60 per cent of the median household income nationally.

The report shows that Haverhill has 38 per cent of the children living in poverty in St Edmundsbury and 35 per cent of those in West Suffolk. In one ward – Haverhill South – 26 per cent of the children resident are living in poverty.

Haverhill has the highest three wards for numbers of children living in poverty throughout the borough. The increase in families using the food bank reflects the trend.

The report also identifies those areas where no strategy to address child poverty can be found, and Suffolk is on their list.

Labour members of Haverhill Town Council say that prospects for lifting the town's children out of poverty are threatened by a benefits cap to be introduced in April, the transfer of council tax benefit to local authorities, with many having to pay an element of the charge for the first time, and the implementation of universal credit from October.

They say escalating energy costs and the threat of road fuel price rises mean the capacity to protect children looks bleak.

Former town Mayor Maureen Byrne said: "Children living in poverty in 2013 should be an embarrassment to us all.

"Evidence shows that child poverty impacts on health, education and employment – impacts which can have lifelong implications.

"We have a national commitment to end child poverty by 2020 – we must take action now."

Cllr Roger André added: "This report demonstrates that Haverhill has a substantial share of child poverty in the area. County and borough strategies must be developed and resources concentrated on our services in Haverhill to address the problem.

"It is unacceptable to ignore the long-term impacts which accompany child poverty.

"Young people are our future. We need to nurture and protect them if we are to have a sustainable and vibrant community. Suffolk County Council and St Edmundsbury Borough Council should think very carefully about child poverty when they are making cuts."

Home badly damaged

FLAMES ripped through a house in a village.

The property in Ashfield Green, Wickhambrook was badly damaged in the blaze, which happened just before 7.45pm last Thursday.

Four fire crews battled to put out the flames in the two-storey detached property, which was described as being well alight.

Firefighters made a fire break in the roof, stripped the roof away to check for hotspots, and moved carbon dioxide cylinders to safety.

Society set to meet

HAVERHILL Aviation Society's next meeting will see a change of programme.

Malcolm Osborn will speak about The 486th Bomb Group at Sudbury on March 21.

The society meets at Stirling House, the former officers' mess at RAF Stradishall, from 7.30pm on the third Thursday of the month.

They welcome like-minded new members who share the enthusiasm for all aspects of the air.

For more information contact the chairman John Rye on 01440 761653.

Growth plan launched

A NEW map for economic growth across Suffolk and beyond has been launched.

At the Apex in Bury St Edmunds yesterday, a major new economic growth plan for the county was unveiled by Suffolk County Council and other partner councils.

The county council has been working with partners in district and borough councils to develop an effective strategy for Suffolk that will deliver economic growth, jobs and increased prosperity.

The keynote speaker was Anthony Hilton, senior commentator from The Independent and Evening Standard, who lives in Suffolk and is highly regarded for his knowledge of the economy and international money markets.

The event launched the official Invest in Suffolk website at www.investinsuffolk.com.

Cllr Judy Terry, Suffolk County Council's cabinet member for economic development, said: "The quality of life for everyone working and living in Suffolk is affected by the economic growth in the county. Our county is home to some of the fastest growing industries that will drive the UK economy."

Grant agreed to help out charity

A RESOURCE centre dealt with 200 new cases in nine months at the end of last year and 1,513 people came in looking for help with food, furniture clothing and managing debt.

Members of Haverhill Town Council received an update from Henry Wilson of the REACH charity group about its projects in the town and agreed to make a grant of £5,000 towards its future work.

It was agreed to give £3,000 to expand debt counselling services to cope with an expected rise in work due to current welfare reforms and £2,000 towards running costs for a new van needed to operate the Furniture Bank.

A report to councillors said the foodbank had received exceptional levels of donations and had distributed 11 tonnes of food parcels.

The debt counsellors had seen 28 new clients and were now fully booked until mid-March.

Henry said: "We are seeing an increase in the number of people we are 'feeding', including more children.

"So far we have distributed 7.5 tonnes in approximately 570 boxes, or approximately 1,200 people fed since April 2012."

Town clerk Will Austin said: "Councillors were glowing in their praise for the work of the Reach organisation and more than happy to maintain the same level of support that they gave last year."

A COUPLE who have spent years working with cars are taking on their first venture in the pub and restaurant trade.

Robbie Watts, who ran the Thurlow Garage now taken on by his daughter Naomi, and the Car Parts Centre in Haverhill, is the new proprietor of the Tavern at Birdbrook, with his wife Pat.

They plan to offer traditional, home-cooked English food, including a regular Sunday carvery at the 55 cover restaurant.

The adjoining hall can cater for up to 250 people and will be available for functions such as weddings, christening parties, wakes and birthday parties.

The Tavern will reopen tomorrow after a major refit with new kitchens and furnishings.

Pat said: "A year ago we had my 50th birthday party there and here we are a year later taking it over."

Robbie said they had been customers at the premises under various past owners and hoped to buck the trend of pubs and restaurants disappearing. He said: "It is not part of the British way of life any more, which is not

Woman praised for tackling intruder

BY JO DEEKS

Email: editorial@haverhillweeklynews.co.uk

A PLUCKY dental technician who fought off an intruder trying to force his way into her surgery has been praised by her employer.

The woman received cuts to her head just above the eye, as the door to the dental surgery hit her when she tried to close it behind her.

The woman had gone out to the bins at the rear of the building when she became aware of someone approaching from the car park behind.

She then went quickly back inside, but as she attempted to close the door behind her, the offender tried to push it back open.

After a brief struggle, she succeeded in keeping the attacker out and managed to close and lock the door.

Caroline Burnett, practice manager at the Henderson Dental Practice in Watting Road, Haverhill, said the woman had come into work on the next morning after the incident, even though she had been given the option of staying at home.

Ms Burnett said: "She was very shaken, but she came in.

"I think she felt it she did not come in, it would be harder the next day.

"She is a technician and was taking rubbish out to the bin.

"She does not usually do that herself, but she was tidying up for the day and did not want to leave it for someone else to do.

"She is quite a tough cookie and was brave to stop him getting in like that.

"We have had a couple of break-ins and we did have a brick thrown through the window last week.

"The police think they were after drugs as there has been a spate of thefts from paramedics. We don't actually carry drugs here, but they don't know that.

"It is terrible, as an employer you do feel responsible to some extent.

"We are reviewing our policies and protocols to see what we can do to prevent it happening again."

Police are appealing for witnesses the incident, which happened at around 5.40pm on Tuesday.

The offender is described as a white male who was wearing a hooded top.

Anyone with information in relation to this incident should contact PC Jason Thomas at Haverhill police station on 101 or Crimestoppers anonymously on 0800 555111.

Leigh shows catwalk way

COLOURFUL clothes by Haverhill-based designer Leigh Rawlins were featured in the recent Cambridge Style Week.

Local designers, businesses and former students who have had great success around the world were involved in the new event, a not-for-profit endeavour aimed to showcase and inspire success.

Celebrating interior designs to haute couture, Cambridge Style Week brought together cutting edge creations with iconic collections from local, national and international designers.

A diverse range of complementary events accompanied catwalk shows, including exhibitions, networking events, themed parties and many more functions designed to innovate, inform and inspire.

Over the week, a host of Cambridge venues granted exclusive access, as the city became the headquarters of style and sophistication.

Calls for big turnout to look at the future of town centre

RESIDENTS are being urged to turn out in numbers to let transport and police leaders know their views on whether cars should be banned in a town centre.

County councillor Guy McGregor, who is Suffolk's portfolio holder for transport, and newly-elected Police Commissioner Tim Passmore will both attend the next Haverhill Safer Neighbourhood Team priority setting meeting on Monday, March 11 at 7pm at Burton End School.

High on the agenda will be pedestrianisation of Haverhill High Street, which has been under discussion for more than two decades.

Cllr McGregor announced last year that the council would not proceed with plans to ban traffic from the street from 10am to 4pm.

Some traders have opposed the ban and it was feared the council

BY JO DEEKS

Email: editorial@haverhillweeklynews.co.uk

could lose a costly public inquiry on the issue.

Haverhill Town Council is keen to attract the biggest possible turnout at the meeting, as strong supporters of pedestrianisation.

A town council survey last summer showed that 70 per cent of 754 respondents favoured pedestrianisation between 10am and 4pm.

Inspector Peter Ferrie, Haverhill's police sector commander, also supports pedestrianisation of the street, in the same way that it already operates in Queen Street.

He feels issuing parking tickets does not stop motorists continuing to flout restrictions and that his officers can be better employed tackling more serious crimes.

Town clerk Will Austin said: "Whilst we urge the community of Haverhill to come to the meeting to take part in the debate, we must remember that this is not just about the immediate problems of traffic and parking and the dangers presented to pedestrians.

"It is about the future of our town centre and its ability to cater for a large and growing population.

"The latest census figures show that over 27,000 people now live in Haverhill, and this figure is expected to grow by a further 10,000 in the next 15-20 years, making us similar in size to Bury St Edmunds.

"But we are left with a town centre that is no bigger than it was 50 years ago, when the population was only 5,500.

"The status quo is not an option – we must have town centre expansion to provide a sustainable way of life for people who live here.

"The mass shopping exodus to Bury and Cambridge is bad for local business, bad for the environment and bad for the community.

"Our vision is of a town centre that can provide for its own, but in order to attract new shops and visitors, we need a High Street that does more than cater for the 'five-minute shopper'.

"Pedestrianisation is a key aspect of our vision – but not at the expense of those existing businesses that thrive in the current environment, or blue badge holders.

"We are lucky in that we have abundant parking every bit as near to the shops as you'll find at any out-of-town shopping centre – and making it free and properly accessible is another key aspiration.

"We recognise that these changes present big challenges – but we know that the longer change takes, the bigger the challenges become."

Homes plan put in

PLANS to demolish a former complex for adults with learning disabilities and build 63 new homes there have been received by planners. The application by Norfolk and Suffolk NHS Foundation Trust and Bloor Homes Eastern is to demolish the 13 bungalows and resource centre at Stourmead Close, Kedington, build a new access onto Mill Road, as well as associated public open space, drainage and ancillary works. It has been received by St Edmundsbury Borough Council.

Crews called to van fire

A CAMPER van went up in flames. Firefighters were called to Hall Road, Barnardiston, shortly before 1pm on Saturday.

Holiday let scheme

PLANS to build a side extension to a village home to provide a bedroom to holiday let have been received by a council.

The plan for Hundon Grange, at Brockley Green Road, Hundon, has been sent to St Edmundsbury Borough Council by Brian Gibson-Green.

Pool bid at cottages

A PROPOSAL for a hydrotherapy pool and enclosure in the grounds of a village home have been received by planners.

Colonel Keith Boulter has made the application for Hall Farm Cottages, Hall Road, Barnardiston, to St Edmundsbury Borough Council.

Ryan celebrates trophy hat-trick

Winning smile: cornet player Ryan Morley.

CP

YOUNG cornet player Ryan Morley has scored a hat-trick of trophies.

Ryan, 16, is mad on brass and was awarded the trophies due to his dedication to playing the cornet.

He recently became principal of Haverhill Youth and Community Band and was also promoted to the top cornet rank of Haverhill Silver Band. He guests with many local bands including Royston and Cambridge City.

At the annual band dinner, musical director of Haverhill Silver Band, Mark Ager, awarded Ryan most improved player of 2012.

At the Community Brass concert in the Arts Centre two weeks ago Haverhill Youth and Community Band musical director Diane Pannell presented him with the trophy for youth member of the year and then Ryan won the over-12 section of the youth solo festival.

Fifteen young players competed in the competition at Westfield School, Haverhill, on February 16 which was aided financially by Haverhill Youth Activity Trust.

Charity offering extra support to care homes

CARE homes will be given added support to improve end-of-life care.

Hospice Partnerships training sessions have been introduced by St Nicholas Hospice Care, a charity providing support for those with life-shortening illnesses in West Suffolk.

The charity plans to pass on their knowledge to care homes across the county that might not have the specialist skills to offer the best palliative care.

West Suffolk Clinical

BY LIZZY BUCHAN

Email: editorial@haverhillweeklynews.co.uk

Commissioning Group has pledged £60,000 to fund the initiative until November this year.

Sally Coldrey, senior registered nurse who is leading Hospice Partnerships, said: "This programme fits so well with what St Nicholas Hospice Care is doing – it is about working with the community, promoting patient choice and also fitting in with national standards of end-of-life care."

The free education programme aims to improve staff knowledge of palliative treatment, and allow patients and families greater choice about their end of life care.

Ms Coldrey added: "We at the hospice value the chance to pass on our knowledge and experience to others."

"Importantly, the training should allow patients a choice to remain in the familiar surroundings of their care home rather than having to go into hospital because of a lack of skilled carers to take care of their end of life needs."

"We run up to 10 training sessions at each care home, with the educational programme tailored to the requirements of each home."

Wet and wild holiday

YOUNGSTERS will be well prepared if they ever get shipwrecked after spending a morning raft-building during their half-term holiday.

The session in the pool at Haverhill Leisure Centre was just one of a range of activities at the centre.

Children aged eight and over got the chance to build a raft with pieces of equipment and race against each other in the pool.

Earlier in the week British Cycling coach Mark Wyer led a session full of obstacles and team pursuits.

Film afternoons and crafts sessions were also held, along with the centre's popular holiday camps including athletics, cycling, swimming, team sports, football, basketball, racket sports, laser blast, squash, and tennis to keep youngsters entertained.

Youth hub scheme to go ahead

BY JO DEEKS

Email: editorial@haverhillweeklynews.co.uk

A TOWN council is to pursue ambitious plans to create a youth hub, regardless of the outcome of a dispute with Suffolk County Council over taking over an existing community building.

At its meeting on Tuesday night, Haverhill Town Council agreed to go ahead with the scheme, whether or not it succeeds in its legal challenge over the county council's decision to hand over the Burton Centre adjoining Haverhill Library to St Nicholas Hospice rather than town council.

Other venues in the town are being considered if the Burton Centre, which was previously used as a youth centre, is not available.

Councillors agreed to press ahead with the scheme, which is part of the youth element identified by the public as something it would like to see done under a new community budget scheme, in which Haverhill is one of 12 pilot towns across the country aimed to see more money managed at local level.

The town council wants to create a single dedicated open access facility in Haverhill, giving youngsters a place to meet twice a week, as well as a chance to engage with agencies about jobs, skills and other issues.

Councillors agreed to allocate £150,000 for conversion of a building, £25,000 a year for running costs and £80,000 a year for maintenance.

Job Centre Plus has also committed to pay £50,000 a year for two years to pay for a co-ordinator and an apprentice youth worker.

Town clerk Will Austin said: "St Nicholas Hospice is awaiting the outcome of a £500,000 bid to the Department of Health to convert the building.

"We will be having discussions with them about the possibility of sharing the building.

"We have been advised that we do have a case for a legal challenge of their decision not to transfer the building to us as had originally been planned.

"We will go ahead in another venue if necessary, but it seems crazy for us to convert another building, when there is a purpose-built youth facility there already.

"It does seem perverse to have to spend several thousand pounds of public money to achieve what is right for the town.

"We will be discussing this with the Suffolk Association of Local Councils, as this could well be seen as a test case for the localism agenda."

Despite difficult trading times during the current recession, Allan is proud that he has managed to keep busy and has just bought a new pick-up truck for his scaffolding work.

Teenagers boost bereavement funds

SIXTH formers attending a ball in December helped boost the funds of a new charity set up to help bereaved families.

The My Blue Heart charity was set up by the Gower family who lost their daughter, Jess, aged just 14 in December 2010 to primary bone cancer.

Amy Hull, a sixth form student at Samuel Ward Academy in Haverhill, played football with Jess for Haverhill Girls Football Club and wanted to do something in her memory.

Organisers were grateful to Haverhill Rovers, who donated the use of their hall free of charge, and the ball raised £140.

The cash was handed over to Shirley Gower by Amy and fellow sixth former Jess Harburt, who helped organise the event.

The charity aims to encourage understanding and compassion towards everyone who has to live on without someone they love.

It aims to give bereaved people a way to show others they are grieving through wearing a heart shaped badge, in forget me not blue with a red heart inside it.

The badge conveys the message 'I carry your heart in mine and always will'.

It is hoped that the hearts will become a well recognised symbol of bereavement, providing a way to communicate loss and give others the opportunity to show consideration and support.

It is also hoped that the hearts bring some comfort to those who wear them.

All profits will be used to support programmes for bereaved children in the local community such as Nicky's Way, run by St Nicholas Hospice in Bury St Edmunds.

Together we can beat this

When two young strangers were hospitalised with anorexia nervosa, they never expected to find a new best friend. Now they live together in St Ives – and are on a mission to help others beat eating disorders. Interview by Emma Higginbotham SNUGGLED up together on the sofa, it's obvious that Emma Sawyer and Naomi Rose are the very best of friends.

But while most friendships are formed in childhood, at college or at work, Emma and Naomi bonded under very different – and very difficult – circumstances.

They met, in 2010, on the adult eating disorders ward at Addenbrooke's Hospital. Both had anorexia nervosa, but both shared a goal – they were determined to beat it.

For Emma, 24, life was going well until her late teens. Growing up in St Ives, she'd been dancing since the age of 3, and, determined to make it in the West End, won a place at a performing arts college.

"At first I loved it, but it was a very pressurised environment, and you have to be a certain type of person," she says. "You have to be able to step over people to get what you want – to get parts, to get noticed – and I'm not one of those people. I'm the sort of person who'd always put other people first."

"It was probably about halfway through my first year that I started to get really homesick. I started to feel very low, and very lonely. That was when things started to go a bit weird."

Around the same time, Emma's father was diagnosed with bowel cancer, "and it was very scary for me to see my dad like that," she says.

"He started going through chemo, and I felt like I had to be strong for the rest of my family. I was feeling very low, but I just thought I'd keep it to myself – and I took it out on myself."

For Emma, food wasn't so much the issue as fanatical exercising. "I thought exercise was the way to make myself look like a dancer, so we had eight-hour days at college, and then I'd be exercising in my room from about 8pm to one o'clock in the morning. Sometimes longer."

"It didn't start to get really bad until I went back for my second year. I didn't stop eating completely, but I just didn't feel hungry. I didn't feel worthy of food."

In her heart Emma knew it was getting out of control: "but I was denying it, really. I just thought it's what you did to be dedicated."

By the end of her second year, Emma could no longer cope. Deciding to leave college, she moved back home and started training to be a dance teacher – but soon realised that turning her back on her dream wasn't the answer. "To me, I was a dancer. That's what I was, and the idea of giving that up was really difficult. My mood just steadily went on the decline, and my eating got quite erratic."

Neither Emma nor Naomi are willing to share details about their weight at their lowest point, or how little they were eating: "We don't want it to be a trigger to anyone who might be vulnerable," explains Emma.

"All I will say is that I was lying to everyone around me. I was mostly at home on my own during the day, and I was just making myself more and more reclusive. The only time I was getting out of the house was to teach, and I was making everyone believe that I was happy and really enjoying my training."

It was clear, though, that Emma was getting dangerously thin: "but nobody said anything directly to me: my family weren't sure what they were dealing with, really. It was like an elephant in the room."

By the time she was six months into her training, Emma had reached the point where she could barely walk. Eventually she saw a doctor, who referred her to the adult eating disorders service.

"It had got to the stage where I actually wanted to get help. I was really desperate, because I felt like I'd given up – I didn't want to be here. I didn't want to kill myself, it wasn't something I'd actively have done, I just wanted to disappear."

When doctors discovered that Emma's liver was beginning to fail, she was admitted to S3, Addenbrooke's adult eating disorders ward, where she was to spend the next seven months.

"It was a scary time, but I was relieved that I didn't have to look after myself any more,” she says. “It was really hard, though: it was all centred around psychotherapy and weight restoral, and initially you weren’t allowed to go out, even to the hospital concourse. You’re literally being looked after in a little bubble, with your freedom taken away. But Naomi pulled me out of a hole. She was my rock.”

Naomi, 20, had already been in the unit for three months when Emma arrived – and had a far longer history of battling anorexia.

Originally from Peterborough, Naomi had a tough childhood. But although she had issues with low self-esteem, her eating habits weren’t a problem until she turned 12.

“I wasn’t a fussy eater: my family always said I was really good with my food,” says Naomi. “But when I went to secondary school I felt like I was being thrown into a pit of lions. I had no friends – there was only one boy from my primary school who went with me – so I felt very alone. I was terrified.”

Sensing that Naomi was vulnerable, the other children began to bully her. “They’d move their chairs away so they didn’t have to sit near me, and they’d throw my books on the floor. I’ve always felt ugly, and they used to call me ‘The Grinch’ because I’d walk around with my hair down over my face to try to hide it, because I wanted to disappear.”

Like Emma, Naomi stopped eating enough, and started exercising fanatically. “I wanted to change something about myself, and this was something that I could change,” she shrugs.

That summer, the family went on holiday to Spain: “And that was the catalyst,” says Naomi. “My mum had been slightly worried beforehand, but she didn’t realise quite how bad it was until then.”

“She didn’t realise that I’d lost so much weight, and obviously on holiday it was all laid bare. With the exercising, I wouldn’t just rest: I’d be in the pool swimming, or going on long walks. I couldn’t hide myself away, so they saw me, and my behaviours, and it shocked them.”

Back at home, Naomi was sent to see doctors, therapists and dieticians, but nothing helped. “It got to the point where I was too weak to go to school, so they tried to put me on bed-rest, but I didn’t listen to them. I didn’t rest: I’d be moving around at home all the time.”

“I felt like I was being squashed, like they were trying to take everything away from me. It just got out of control.”

Naomi spent the next five years in and out of specialist centres and paediatric hospital wards: “My eating got really bad, and I wasn’t drinking water either. I was just really, really self-destructive,” she says.

“It took over completely, and I wasn’t ‘me’ any more. My mum says it was like I was possessed, because I would scream and shout at her and get really aggressive and angry. Anyone who knows me knows I’m not that kind of person, but it just took over.” At 17, Naomi was admitted to S3, and was by far the youngest patient. “It was scary,” she says. “I was used to being in hospital, but I’d never been in with adults before. They had so much more life experience, but they were also so badly ill with this illness, and it was horrible to think that’s how your life could be. It was like looking into the mirror of the future, and it was really frightening to see it.”

But Naomi’s life was to change the day Emma was admitted. “Emma looked so shy and quiet,” she recalls. “I could tell before I even spoke to her that she’d never been in a place like this, and I felt like I wanted to protect her from getting sucked in to the negative stuff – like I wish someone had done for me when I was younger.”

“Places like that can help you, but they can also make you worse: the older people especially tended to be very negative, as if their life has gone now, and they’d wasted it, and they’d drag you down with them. You ended up feeling like you’re never going to get any better.”

The two got chatting over photos of Emma’s cats, and just clicked: “and from then we were together all the time, really,” remembers Naomi. “We supported each other, but a lot of people didn’t realise we were helping each other positively. They even tried to keep us apart, because they thought we were being negative towards each other.”

The truth was quite the opposite: “We were just determined that we were going to beat it,” says Emma simply.

When they were discharged, Naomi went home to Peterborough but, keen to make a fresh start, came to live with Emma and her parents in St Ives (Emma’s father has now made a full recovery). Naomi is now at college, studying health and social care, and Emma is training to be a nursery assistant: she’s also at college, and works part-time at a day nursery. “I love it,” she says. “It was very, very hard to adjust, but instantly I knew that that was what I wanted to do.”

For these best friends, the future looks bright: they’ve even challenged themselves to do a three-day trek of Iceland, in aid of eating disorders charity Beat. But Naomi admits that it’s not over just yet.

“I wouldn’t say we are fully recovered,” she says. “It sounds really cheesy, but we have an unbreakable bond,” adds Emma. “We lift each other. We’re both determined that recovery is possible – and we’re on the way.”

Thinking of Mum this Mothers Day Sunday 10th March 2013

Coming home to mother

THE tradition of Mother's Day was believed to have started in Greek times, with a festival for Cybele. The Romans also held a celebration of Juno, the goddess of womanhood, particularly in areas concerning marriage. In Victorian Britain, it was tradition churchgoers were supposed to return to their home, or mother, church. As many of the population had moved to work in the cities, it became a day when workers from the towns would be allowed home to the villages to see their mothers.

MAKE your mum feel special this Mother's Day! Here are some great gift ideas:

■ Flowers are a long-standing tradition for this springtime celebration.

Give her a seasonal bouquet, or some potted bulbs to brighten her window sills.

■ Take high tea, and push the boat out with strawberries and cream, scones or even champagne.

Dine out or at home, the main thing is that she won't have to lift a finger.

■ Spa breaks are a welcome oasis of calm for a busy mum.

If you can't afford the whole package, why not buy a few gift vouchers, or even offer to give her a manicure yourself.

■ Going out for lunch is a popular option, so be sure to book in advance.

Whether it's a country pub or fancy restaurant, pick somewhere she'll feel appreciated and spoilt.

■ Homemade presents are pretty hard to beat, so try your hand at a pretty card, photo album, scrap book, artwork... the list is endless.

Check some craft websites for ideas.

■ If you're more into cooking than crafts, why not bake a cake or make an entire meal in honour of your mum.

■ Not having enough money is no excuse not to treat your mum.

Help out with tasks she finds tedious – take the bins out, help file her paperwork or give her a lift next time she needs one.

Ladies given safety advice

BY JO DEEKS

Email: editorial@haverhillweeklynews.co.uk

MORE ladies' self defence classes are being held following a spate of attacks on girls and women.

A total of 14 ladies attended a course run by Haverhill Wado Freestyle Karate Club last weekend and another course is taking place on Sunday.

Greg Malyon, a senior instructor with the club, said they had been running classes for a few years, but had put on extra ones to cope with demand following recent incidents in the town.

Earlier this month three women were accosted in one week, with similar incidents reported in January.

Although police were not linking the incidents, some involving teenagers and others older women, police did urge women to be aware of their circumstances and not go down alleyways on their own.

Mr Malyon said: "We had one 12-year-old come along who is quite small and timid. She was petrified. I can understand why she would feel that way."

"We don't want to overload them with information, but we try to show them things that will work with several different kinds of attack."

"Most people are surprised how easy it is and I tell them if you don't remember anything else, you have still got nice sharp fingernails."

"We have been running these courses for seven years now, and have a good following. Many ladies come back time and again as it gives them the chance to practice in a safe environment."

"However, many ladies believe they either cannot do it, or don't need it. All they need though is the will to give it a go, and so give themselves a chance."

The three-hour course was led by Mr Malyon, 2nd Dan Black Belt and Senior KEWAP instructor, and Georgina McGivern 1st Dan Black Belt.

The club is running another course on Sunday at Withersfield Village Hall, from 9am until noon.

There are a limited number of spaces still available, so places need to be booked in advance.

To book, or simply find out more information, contact Greg on 07811 878328, or e-mail hufk@sky.com.

Weekend TV 22

Rag week with father and son

Two of TV's most iconic characters have been brought back to life in a new co-production between Kneehigh theatre company and the West Yorkshire Playhouse. We caught up with director Emma Rice to find out more.

Why Steptoe and Son? Why now?

I think there are many reasons for doing Steptoe now. We are in recession and the poverty experienced by the characters is not a long way from what families of all kinds are experiencing now. They reuse, recycle and graft to work their way out of poverty.

One of the choices I have made in this adaptation is to see them succeed in part. By the end of the show, they have climbed out of the desperate situation we first met them in. There is obviously more money than before and basic luxuries such as a TV and a longed for cocktail cabinet, but, of course, it is not only the lack of money that holds them together. The relationship goes much deeper and darker than mere financial constraints.

This brings me to the other, more personal reason for why I wanted to explore this piece: family. Steptoe is about deep family ties, duty, freedom and the desire to break free. We all feel this at different points in our life, whether as teenagers wanting to leave the homes of our parents, as unhappy adults dreaming of life outside an unhappy marriage, or when caring for a relative and feeling our own identity ebbing away. These emotions recur throughout life in different guises, but strike at the heart of a fundamental conflict – that of duty versus freedom. And if we have all known what it is like to crave freedom, we also know the opposite – the terrible fear of losing someone or something that we love.

Albert holds on tight to Harold through fear and need – two very powerful forces. Families, eh?!

What elements of the original will you be faithful to, and what elements do you plan to change?

I have been very faithful to the text. Almost every word in the piece has been written by Galton and Simpson. They are two of the greatest living comedy writers so I wanted to use their work and bring their work to a new generation.

I think there are fewer laughs in the text these days, but the heart of Steptoe still beats loud and strong. I chose episodes from the earlier series of the sitcom I felt these were more emotional and the characters revealed more of their inner selves. Later in the series it was more about the situation and less about the men.

What I haven't been faithful to is the setting and the form. In this piece, the moon hovers, a woman dances, cocktails are drunk and a character morphs into Louis Armstrong. I have used music to take us through time and snap us out of naturalism. There is a strong visual poetry that reminds us of the world they are missing and at times, it feels more like an operatic staging than a domestic one.

What lessons do we learn from the show as an audience?

I hate the notion of theatre teaching lessons. I am not in the business of educating or having a 'message'. I use theatre to explore my own experience and memory and try to stay instinctive. I want theatre to entertain, surprise and reveal, but it is really up to the audience what it might mean to them. For one person they might feel an affinity with Harold. Another with Albert. At different stages we feel and understand different things.

We also have different questions. I try to explore my experience with truth and tenderness and hope that what I discover will resonate with the people who see it. They will bring their own truths and their own understanding. What I do know is that, in this show, I see my gran peeling apples and working from dawn to dusk. I also see her shortly before she died being cared for by my parents. In my mind's eye, I see me caring for my mum and dad as they become frail and I also see my need to run away. I see my past and my future in very British colours.

Laugh with home bird

SARAH Millican has booked three dates in Cambridge next year.

The current reigning Queen of Comedy says she's giving up the party scene (Ann Summers), easing off on the drinking (fizzy pop equals wealthy dentists) and settling down (taking her bra off).

Determined to put down some roots, she now has a cat (furry baby) and even a tree (she has a lot of mugs).

In Home Bird – Millican's third national tour – you will learn what to take on a dirty weekend, the easiest way to blend in in posh restaurants and how to teach a pensioner to swear.

Catch her at the Corn Exchange on February 6/7 and May 14, 2014.

Tickets £25 from (01223) 357 851 / www.cornex.co.uk.

Tune in for life through radio

EVER wondered what makes all the sound come out of your radio?

Are You Sitting Comfortably? is a new comedy that will take you on a journey through the wireless, as we follow the life of the man who lives in there.

His life in the FM section of the radio is comfortable enough, but for one thing: he can never be with the woman he loves. She lives in the AM section of the radio, and the two sections are completely isolated from one another.

Three writers from Trinity's Maggie & Stump Comedy Society perform this hour-long story of boy-can't-meet-girl, bursting with sketches, music, and all the radio-related puns you could dream of.

Tune in at the ADC Theatre until Saturday at 11pm. Tickets are £4-6. Contact: (01223) 300085 / www.adctheatre.com

LIVE SHOW: Bill Bailey has two nights at the Corn Exchange in October.

Bill's back for more

BILL Bailey had Doubts about the modern world, but these have now grown into Qualms.

In his new live show, the hirsute comedy legend will be channelling these feelings of Unease and Apprehension, with the help of Religious Dubstep, his folk bouzouki, Horntallica, a re-appraisal of some of the world's greatest works of art and perhaps a dub version of Downton Abbey.

In Qualmpeddler, Bailey looks at the Consequences of Lies, the Unending Search for the Higgs and the Hiding Skills of Dentists. He tries to confront his Cluster-Qualm of living in a Time of Spectacular Ignorance, and Rare Planetary Alignment that may be part of the Mayan End of Days prophecy. Come savour this Broth of Anxiety. The show promises all the classic Bailey elements: trademark musical mash-ups, multi-lingual riffs, films, songs, philosophising and silliness on a grand scale... plus one amazing owl.

Qualmpeddler is at the Corn Exchange on October 21/22. Tickets £25 from (01223) 357 851 / www.cornex.co.uk.

The big film

HANSEL & GRETEL: WITCH HUNTERS

certificate 15, 1h28m

DIRECTOR Tommy Wirkola puts a bloodthirsty new spin on the classic fairytale in this gleefully violent fantasy.

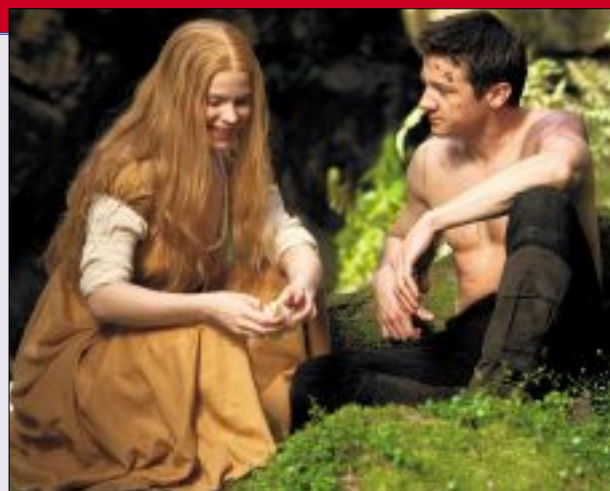

Hansel & Gretel: Witch Hunters does exactly what it says in the snappy title – expands the story of two children held hostage by a crone in a gingerbread house into a full-blooded battle between the forces of good and evil.

The script marries action movie convention with an olde-worldie setting, providing the titular heroes with an arsenal of pithy one-liners as they despatch the enemy.

Hansel (Jeremy Renner) and his feisty sister Gretel (Gemma Arterton) had their first encounter with witches as children when they stumbled into a house made of delicious candy.

Through luck and enterprise, the siblings flung the diabolical crone into her oven, establishing their reputation throughout the land as protectors against the dark arts.

Hansel and Gretel grow up with a hatred for these shape-shifting creatures and devote every waking minute to hunting down witches with their ingenious homemade weapons.

When several children from one sleepy village go missing, Sheriff Berringer (Peter Stormare) blames local woman Mina (Pinla Viitala) and prepares to burn her as a witch.

The eponymous heroes intervene in the nick of time and Gretel settles the argument with a headbutt, freeing Mina who takes an immediate shine to smitten Hansel.

The siblings then set about tracking down powerful grand witch Muriel (Famke Janssen), who is kidnapping local tykes as a sacrifice during the forthcoming night of the Blood Moon.

The witches are aided by a hulking ogre called Edward (voiced by Robin Atkin Downes), who carries off children into the night.

With the odds stacked against them, Hansel, Gretel and an enthusiastic protegee (Thomas Mann) lay their lives on the line to save the children and send Muriel and her coven back to hell.

With lashings of gore and potty-mouthed humour, Hansel & Gretel: Witch Hunters is no slavish retread of the Brothers Grimm.

Wirkola splatters one crone's guts all over the camera lens and another set-piece reduces a swarm of the villainesses to chunks of airborne flesh and entrails.

Renner and Arterton dispatch their prey with the occasional well-timed aside, both enjoying the physical aspects of their roles.

However, frenetic action sequences cannot compensate for flimsy plotting and a paucity of character development.

Shape up for summer

by Hannah Stephenson

I HAVE to admit it, I love formal gardens, those with a definite structure, sense of purpose and everything in its place.

Clipped box hedges, strong geometry using evergreens shaped carefully into balls and pyramids, evenly spaced in uniform lines or sections, can give a garden – front or back – a contemporary lift. Even a couple of box balls or standard bays in pots either side of your front door can give your home a grand entrance feel.

If you want to add some formality to your patio this summer as a backdrop or accompaniment to pots which are full of colourful blooms, topiary may be the answer.

Potted topiary can add emphasis to a garden design, for example, placing uniformly clipped globes along the edge of a path. Shaped plants are often used in formal settings but can also act as valuable exclamation marks in more informal schemes.

CLIP IT: topiary can add emphasis to a garden design.

Among the plants easiest to shape to your requirements are box (Buxus sempervirens), sweet bay (Laurus nobilis), yew (Taxus baccata) and privet (Ligustrum delavayanum).

While slow-growing evergreens are the traditional topiary plants, you can use climbers to cover wire frames for a faster result.

So, where do you start if you want to have a go?

Beginners should start with a simple box ball or bay pyramid that has already been trained to shape and keep it that way by trimming it twice a year, in early summer and early autumn. Potted topiary also needs to be watered well in summer and protected from frost in winter, so it's best to place it near the house.

As your topiary grows, clip it very lightly every couple of months, taking off the tips of the shoots, to keep its natural shape while it grows and encourage branching, which will help thicken the shape.

Tools you will need are secateurs, small hand shears or one-handed 'sheep' shears. Secateurs should be used to shape larger-leaved plants including bay, holly and viburnum.

If you are trimming a ball or dome, stand above the plant, turning the shears upside down so that the shape of the blade follows the curve. Keep walking around and standing back to view the shape, making sure everything is even.

Most topiary is based around a wire framework. Young shoots are tied into the frame to create bushy growth, then sideshoots are tied into the framework and cut back regularly to maintain the shape.

If you have a little more time to create your own pyramid in a pot, choose a plant which looks like it will grow to roughly the right shape, plant it in the pot and place three bamboo canes made into a wigwam shape around it, tied with twine at the top. Tie any long shoots to the cane with twine to form the outer edges, then prune the plants to the 'pyramid' template to maintain the shape.

You should avoid shaping evergreens between the end of summer and mid to late spring, or the soft re-growth might not survive frosts.

For a quick fix, grow some plain green ivy over a wire topiary frame to create a traditional effect much quicker. Just plant the ivy around the rim of the pot and twine the trails around the wires of the frame. The leaves should hold the stems in place and you can snip off unwanted shoots once your frame is covered.

Suitable ivy with short joints includes Hedera helix 'Duckfoot' and 'Tres Coupee', which remain compact.

Remember that potted topiary can also be slotted into your flower border at any time of year to fill gaps and add interest, although in winter more elaborate shapes you may have created out of bent wire, from peacocks to teddy bears, will be a good talking point when there's nothing else on the patio.

■ BEST OF THE BUNCH – Crocus
These pint-sized bulbs herald the start of spring, providing cheery early colour to borders, patio pots and naturalised in grass.

They look stunning planted in drifts of one variety, opening wide in the sunshine to attract pollinating insects, their seedheads carried low in the foliage.

They may look fragile, with their delicate flowers in shades from purple and pale lavender to yellow and white, but crocuses are surprisingly resilient and can be planted at any time in autumn or early winter providing they have been stored in a cool dark place. When the narrow, dark green leaves wither, you can mow over them as long as you don't cut the grass too short.

The smaller-flowered specie crocus, such as C. tommasinianus, look great under trees and can spread rapidly, especially on poor, free-draining soil.

The larger-flowered Dutch crocus also work well naturalised in grass or gravel, although can be susceptible to weather damage, especially when the flowers are fully open. But they are ideal for pots and look particularly effective planted in one colour in a container and left on the patio as an early-spring taster.

Find 1000s of cars locally

300mpg anyone?

Make the most of 2013 deals

THE new '13' registration plate will hit the roads tomorrow and there will be some great new car finance deals on offer to encourage buyers into the showrooms.

To make the most of these deals, Equifax, the online credit information provider, is advising car buyers to make sure their credit status is looking its best before they book their test drive.

"New car sales in 2013 have taken off strongly with industry experts highlighting the economic downturn as a key factor," said Neil Munroe, external affairs director, Equifax.

"It's believed some motorists might be opting for a new car to make the most of more fuel efficient technologies to combat rising prices at the pumps. And the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders (SMMT) has said the focus might have shifted to buying a new car instead of moving house.

"Whatever the reason, the car manufacturers are coming up with strong finance deals to get motorists buying the new 13 plate.

"But to be eligible for one of the many finance deals on offer it is essential that a car buyer's credit history is in the best possible shape."

Lenders make checks with credit reference agencies to see whether an applicant has kept up to date on repaying their credit. They also use a "credit scoring" system to decide whether or not to lend to consumers – and in some instances – at what price.

"Therefore, the better an individual's credit score, the better the rate they may get, helping them take advantage of the best deals on the market. We think it's really worthwhile budding new car buyers obtaining a copy of their credit report before they apply for finance.

"Once downloaded, it can be checked on the handy Equifax app," adds Munroe.

"That way motorists can make sure their credit status is looking its best before they make an application. And the better their status, the better finance or loan deal they should be able to negotiate."

Tips for ensuring a good credit rating include being registered on the Electoral Roll and making more than the minimum payment on credit agreements every month.

Equifax offers a free online credit check to view your personal credit report, including any joint agreements you may have.

VW unveils the world's most fuel-efficient car

VOLKSWAGEN has confirmed that its XL1 Super Efficient Vehicle, the most fuel-efficient production car in the world, with a fuel consumption value of 313mpg will go into production at the company's Osnabrück factory in Germany.

Thanks to its plug-in hybrid system, the two-seater can also cover a distance of up to 50km in all-electric mode and therefore with zero local emissions.

The two-seater has a (limited) top speed of 100mph, gets to 60mph in 12.7 seconds, and has emissions of just 21g/km.

The two-cylinder, 800cc back-up engine runs beside a 5.5kWh lithium-ion battery: both are mated to a seven-speed DSG gearbox.

The German firm was yesterday celebrating the XL1's efficiency, saying: "The XL1 is an automotive hero that follows pure sports car design principles: it weighs 795kg, has perfect aerodynamics – a Cd figure of 0.189 – and a low centre of gravity, being just 1.1 metres high."

The firm added: "The new XL1 is currently the most fuel efficient and eco-friendly automobile in the world. The only reason that this vehicle could be built is because it redefined the limits of what is feasible both in terms of the technologies it utilises and its manufacturing method."

One of the main manufacturing developments has been the use of a new gluing process to replace the traditional welding methods.

Thought-provoking new Mazda3

ALTHOUGH it looks broadly similar to its predecessor, the latest Mazda3 features a myriad of detail changes, writes Andy Enright.

Is this enough to propel it into the big league of family hatchbacks? Probably not. The Mazda3 remains an understated and mature proposition that has always lacked the big promotional push but is a quietly cerebral choice.

The mainstream engine line up has been rationalised, consisting of two petrol engines and three diesel units. The petrol engines comprise a 104bhp 1.6-litre and a 150bhp 2.0-litre, while the diesel family opens with a 1.6-litre turbodiesel and tops out with 2.2-litre turbodiesels of either 148 or 183bhp outputs. The Mazda3 MPS performance model continues, delivering 255bhp of turbocharged punch. This demolishes the sprint to 60mph in 6.1 seconds and registers a top speed of 155mph. Peak power is achieved at 5,500rpm and maximum torque of 380Nm comes on stream at 3,000rpm. Drive is directed to the front wheels only, although traction is surprisingly good.

The Mazda rides on a sophisticated chassis with MacPherson strut front suspension and a multi-link arrangement at the rear. It's a configuration the car shares with the sharpest-handling models in the family hatchback class. Mazda has also paid great attention to the 3's chassis rigidity and electro-hydraulic power steering in pursuit of a sporty driving experience. The latest models feature retuned dampers to better cope with British road conditions. The Mazda3 has always been a fun car to drive, its outright talent perhaps a little masked by heavily assisted steering. With some of the most powerful engines in its class, Mazda has demonstrated that while it is committed to improving efficiency, it has far from neglected the old zoom-zoom.

Mazda claims to have imbued the latest car with "more muscular visual appeal" but, if I'm frank, I'm struggling to spot it. Visual references to the old car include a subtly revised grille and bumper, with a revised rear bumper and updated alloy wheel designs. Inside, the colour palette has been altered and some of the plastics are of a higher, but still not class-leading, quality. Substantial effort has been paid to improving refinement, with added soundproofing and better underbody aerodynamics.

The interior had always been the 3's weak link. The design of the fascia and controls were clean and crisp but the materials quality was lacking and outright space for storage wasn't the best. Mazda has gone some way to addressing the first of these issues but many rivals still offer more practical oddments and stowage solutions. The 340-litre hatch is a decent enough size though.

The Mazda3 is a car that doesn't initially grab you, but rewards a little time spent with it. There are many more obvious choices within the family hatch sector, but if you're bored with the usual Focus, Astra and Golf fare and would like a car that won't impose a swingeing financial penalty on wanting to be a little different, the Mazda3 is a smart pick.

The latest set of changes don't change the overall picture too much but serve as a timely reminder that the Mazda3 remains a refreshingly self-assured proposition that doesn't need to try too hard.

It remains a solid all-rounder, without excelling in any one area. If it doesn't grab the headlines, then that can, in its own way, act as a benefit to those who prefer its assured, low key approach. The 1.6-litre Sport diesels look to be the pick of the range, with a great specification and low running costs.

The more homework you do on this market sector, the more the Mazda3 will appeal.

Note gets Safety Shield

THE all-new Nissan Note has been revealed ahead of its global debut at the Geneva Motor Show in March.

The dynamically styled B-segment contender will be fitted with safety technology never before seen in a car of this type, including blind spot warning, lane departure warning and moving object detection systems, which warns the driver if something should start moving behind.

Nissan calls the new technology Safety Shield.

The two 1198cc three-cylinder petrol engines are new to the Note, with a choice of either a normally aspirated 79bhp version capable of 60mpg with emissions of 109/km, or a 97bhp supercharged option with more torque and better efficiency, rated at nearly 66mpg and 99g/km of CO2.

A 1.5-litre 89bhp diesel will also be produced, with emissions down to 95g/km.

New Octavia Estate on the way

JUST weeks after the new Octavia hatchback was introduced to the range, Czech brand Skoda has revealed details of the Estate version.

An increase of 90mm in length, 45mm in width and a vast 110mm in wheelbase over the previous generation model gives the Octavia Estate a big boost in terms of cabin space; 610 litres of boot space with the rear seats in place and 1,740 with the seats folded.

Alongside clever storage ideas already found in the hatchback, the Octavia Estate has a folding front passenger seat, a coat rack and a remote folding function for the rear seats.

Identical from the front, the Octavia Estate has its own design treatment at the rear but it is neatly integrated into the overall shape to create a stylish load carrier.

It also shares the engine range with the hatchback model, including the super-efficient GreenLine version which will deliver a remarkable 83.1mpg and CO2 emissions of 89g/km.

Revealed to the public for the first time at the Geneva Motor Show in March, the Octavia Estate will reach UK showrooms later in the spring.

BSM's learner insurance deal

BSM driving school has teamed up with Provisional Marmalade insurance to offer a learner drivers' insurance scheme.

The scheme will allow learners to purchase competitive cover for private practice in a friend or family member's car. This cover is in addition to the relative or friend's existing policy – saving hundreds of pounds on insurance costs.

Mark Peacock, head of BSM, said: "Adding a young learner to an existing policy can be extremely costly, particularly because you have to do it for the full 12 months.

"This scheme will allow learners to purchase ad-hoc insurance at a competitive rate so they can continue to build their driving skills outside of professional lessons."

The insurance can be taken out on a pay-as-you-go monthly basis, for as little as £85.

Kia Pro-Cee'ds to spec up hatchback

KIA has revealed the full specifications and prices for the new Pro-Cee'd three-door hatchback.

Available in two unique trim levels called S and SE, the Pro-Cee'd also has two engine options.

Both 1.6 litres in size, the 133bhp GDI petrol is £1,100 cheaper than the 126bhp CRDi diesel but the latter achieves CO2 emissions of 100g/km and qualifies for free road tax and congestion charge exemption.

A dual-clutch automatic gearbox is available, but only on the petrol engine.

Performance changes for S and SE models though, despite sharing engines. First, second and sixth gears are different, making the petrol SE 0.3 seconds faster to 60mph and the diesel SE a full second quicker than the diesel S in the same scenario.

The roof, the side panels – including the 27cm longer doors and the whole rear end – have been redesigned from the five-door Cee'd template.

Overall, the car is 40mm lower than its more practical cousin, and looks more aggressive with it. It does, however, maintain a 380-litre boot.

Prices start at £17,495 for the petrol S model. The diesel S is £18,595 and SE trim adds £2,000.

Luke's sharp as Thurlow avoid an upset

Thurlow 2 Newmarket Tn 1
HILLSBOROUGH CUP UNDER-16 FIRST ROUND

NEWMARKET gave Thurlow a scare as the team from a division below took an early lead and fought from start to finish.

Luke Stearn came off the bench to snatch a brace with two well-taken goals but it was the Newmarket goalkeeper who stole the show with several astounding saves, stopping the home side from stamping their authority on the game.

Ryan Harrow controlled the midfield, earning the Thurlow man of the match.

West Wrattling 5
Fulbourn Falcons 1
CAMBRIDGE & DIST COLTS LGE, UNDER-13A

WRATTING secured their first win of 2013 with a dominant display.

The early breakthrough came when Rory Cameron fed a fine through ball to the hard-working Daniel Cordwell, who finished low past the Falcons keeper.

Wrattling keeper Charlie Mitchison made fabulous diving one-handed save, before Cordwell scored Wrattling's second – a fantastic individual run from his own half.

Chinomso Nkem-Peul quickly added the third after his persistence in chasing down the ball led to a defensive mistake, which he punished.

A Wrattling defensive mistake gave Falcons a foothold in the game early in second half, but Ethan Murphy secured the win by scoring a penalty, and then adding the fifth following a beautiful through ball from Ronnie Ledwith.

Wrattling man of the match was Kealan Boon.

Finley Plant's two goals in three second-half minutes steered West Wrattling under-11s to a 2-0 win over Walpole Wanderers in the Cams Mini League Knockout Cup, third round.

Moody to the rescue

Defender makes vital clearance as Haverhill hold off high-flyers

Mildenhall Town 0 Haverhill Rovers 0
THURLOW NUNN LEAGUE, PREMIER DIVISION

HAVERHILL held high-flying Mid-Anglia rivals Mildenhall to a goalless draw.

Andrew Wood went closest to getting a goal for the hosts when he rounded the goalkeeper and was denied by a timely clearance from Perry Moody, while striker Dan Cornwell had the best chances for the visitors.

Haverhill's interim manager Kieron Hammatt said: "I thought we were excellent.

"We battered them for the first 35 minutes and made them change their shape.

"We were strong, well organised and had a good work ethic, so we're chuffed with the point.

"It was a massive positive after the Stanway game. We'd said after that game that those standards were unacceptable.

"In the end we were a little disappointed not to have nicked all three points, but it stands us in good stead for the Dereham game on Saturday."

Haverhill travel to Dereham in the Premier Division on Saturday.

Haverhill Sports Association 4 Earls Colne 1
KENT BLAXILL ESSEX & SUFFOLK BORDER LEAGUE, PREMIER DIVISION

HSA moved to joint second in the table after a dominant second-half performance helped them overcome Earls Colne.

HSA started the brighter of the two sides and took the lead in the 12th minute.

Following good pressure from the HSA front pair of Craig Cutts and Ryan Weaver on the Colne defence, a back pass to the keeper was overhit, forcing Felton into a save. The referee awarded HSA a free kick 10 yards out.

Harry Halls fired a low, hard shot into the wall and Ben Bradley reacted quickest to steer the ball home.

HSA missed further chances through Cutts and Weaver before a somewhat controversial non award of a penalty disrupted the home team's pattern of play.

Two minutes later Earls Colne were awarded a penalty when the otherwise excellent Micheal Austin fouled Hutchings.

Colne top-scorer Coote stepped up and shot into the bottom corner just out of reach of Liam Savage in the home goal to send the teams in level at half time.

The second period saw HSA retake the lead when they were awarded a penalty after Theedom handled inside the area.

Halls stepped up and maintained his 100 per cent record from the spot.

Five minutes later the lead was extended when good work by HSA's defence forced Coote into a back pass to his keeper from the halfway line, Weaver put Felton under pressure and the unfortunate keeper missed his kick allowing HSA top-scorer Weaver the simplest of finishes.

Plenty more chances were created, with Aaron Forshaw, Weaver and Paul Hunt all testing Felton and Savage repelling Hutchings before HSA got their fourth in the last minute.

Paul Hunt won the ball in midfield and fed Owen Longley. Longley played a great through ball into the path of Adam Palmer who set Cutts in one-on-one with the keeper. The striker rolled the ball into the corner for his fifth goal in his last three games.

HSA welcome last year's champions West Bergholt to the Croft on Saturday.

Controversy: HSA's Ryan Weaver hits the deck but a penalty is not given.
